By TIM BIRCH, REFORMER. NUMB. CXVI.

LONDON, SATURDAY, July 1, 1732.

THE religious Stoicks, amongſt us, are as much for baniſhing the Paſſions out of the human Mind as thoſe of old; their eternal Talk is of an intire Conqueſt, and even Extirpation; as if God had beſtow'd them on us for a Curſe, or made a Set of inmate Enemies neceſſary to our Being: Undoubtedly nothing can be more falſe or abſurd than this Doctrine; nothing is more prejudicial to the Juſtice and Honour of the Creator, or more foreign to the Dictate of pure Religion and true Morality. The Paſſions are as much the Organs of the Soul as the Senſes of the Body; they are the Hints and Motives to Action, and I believe it may be truly ſaid that, without them, we ſhould be little more than Vegetables; where we ſprung up, there we ſhould grow, without any Senſe of Virtue or Vice, Right or Wrong, Pleaſure or Pain: So eſſential are they to all we deſign, and all we execute, and ſuch dull unactive Wretches ſhould be without them, if they were not blended with our Conſtitutions. Religion therefore nor Morality would never deſtroy what the Almighty himſelf thought neceſſary; and if it may be expedient to oppoſe them, 'twill be in vain to ſubdue them: To regulate them well and wiſely may be intended the Buſineſs of Reaſon and Virtue, and he who reduces them to the moſt Order is certainly worthy of the moſt Glory: Perhaps our Conduct in this Reſpect was originally deſigned as a Means to allow us ſome Merit of our own, and that, as we're oblig'd to Heaven at firſt for our Talents, we ſhould do Honour to ourſelves by the Application. The natural Conſequence of this will be, that whoever has endeavour'd moſt effectually to reduce the Paſſions to the moſt reaſonable Uſe, has done his Duty beſt, and, without attempting Impoſſibilities, is intitled to the Applauſe of a wiſe and moral Agent. All beyond this is fooliſh and romantic, more than Revelation demands, or Nature juſtifies, and therefore to be rejected as falſe and viſionary. Indeed a Conqueſt is in its own Eſſence inferior to a Regulation, for the one implies Violence, and the other Reaſon only; the firſt may be done by obtruding the Rage of one Paſſion to extinguiſh another, and the laſt ſweetens, reconciles, and harmonizes the Whole: For a Proof of this, I'll ſtate a Couple of Facts that happen'd at different Periods, and in different Nations, and leave my Readers to make the Application. When the great Scipio was perſuing his Conqueſts in Spain, a noble and beautiful Lady became his Captive by the Fate of War: Scipio was himſelf in the Prime of Life, flush'd with Conqueſt, had a Reliſh for Pleaſure, and was intitled by the Mode of that Time to make what Uſe of his Slave he pleas'd; he look'd on her with Pleaſure, and made no Scruple to acquaint her with the Sentiments ſhe had inſpir'd him with, but ſhe receiv'd him with Horror and Reluctance, declar'd a Pre-engagement to a Countryman of her own, and even produc'd her Lover to mediate her Cauſe with his potent Rival. Scipio heard them with ſome Uneaſineſs, appear'd irreſolute, and only condeſcended to declare his Pleaſure at another Interview. The Time appointed came, the General took his Seat, the Guards attended, and the Lady and her Lover threw themſelves at his Feet, bathing them with Tears in the greateſt Violence of Apprehenſion and Perplexity; even the Soldiers themſelves were mov'd with Pity at ſo compaſſionate a Circumſtance: Scipio alone remain'd unmov'd, and, tho' his own Happineſs was intimately concern'd, appear'd ſolicitous for that of others; at laſt, riſing from his Seat, he lifted the Lovers from the Ground, join'd their Hands, dried their Tears, and made them forever happy in each other. This was a greater Action than winning a Battle, or deſtroying a Metropolis; no Man was great enough to conquer Scipio, but Scipio conquer'd himſelf. Some Time after the taking of Conſtantinople by the Turks, a Lady of the Imperial Blood, and of moſt exquiſite Beauty, was preſented by ſome Soldiers to the Conqueror; who, tho' of the moſt fierce and inexorable Diſpoſition, became ſo paſſionately fond of his fair Captive that he forgot the very Name of War, which had been before his only Delight, and waſted two whole Years in the Softneſſes of his Seraglio. During this Time his Army which, till then, had never been out of Action, or ſuffer'd to breathe in Idleneſs, firſt began to wonder at this amazing Change in their Emperor, and afterwards to murmur at his Indolence; till, finding he was too deeply buried in Luxury to be wak'd by Words only, they mutiny'd even under the Walls of the Seraglio, and called aloud to their Sultan to lead them out to War. Mahomet, rouz'd by their Inſolence, demanded the Cauſe of the Officers who attended him, and being as frankly inform'd, order'd a grand Divan to be immediately call'd, to which all the Officers of the Janizaries were ſummon'd, and, when they were aſſembled, he himſelf join'd them, and led in a Lady veil'd in his Hand: Then with a furious Look demanded what Right they had to treſpaſs upon his Pleaſure? He told them he was their Emperor and Lord, and they his Slaves; that his Will was their Law, and their Duty not to diſpute but obey. Nevertheleſs, ſays he, for my own Sake I'll juſtify my own Deeds; the Cauſe of Indolence in me was worthy of its Effect, and, when I ſhew you the Beauty that has conquer'd me, the Conqueſt will be juſtified. Saying this he unveil'd the Lady, who was more beautiful than an Angel, and moſt ſplendidly adorn'd with Jewels; and the whole Aſſembly look'd away their Rage at once, and nothing was heard but Murmurs of Applauſe. Are you ſatisfied, cries the Emperor? We are, was echo'd from the whole Aſſembly: But I am not, rejoins the Sultan, and immediately wreathing his left Hand in the Hair of his innocent unhappy Captive, and drawing his Scimitar with his right, he cut off her beauteous Head at a Blow. See! ſays he, to the aſtoniſh'd mourning Croud, ſee! your Emperor is ſtill Maſter of himſelf, and can conquer his deareſt Paſſion when he pleaſes; I am not to be taught my Duty by you, I am ſufficiently appriz'd of it by myſelf: When I give the Signal of War 'tis my Breath commands it, and when 'tis my Will it ceaſes; I lead to Battle, and, if I ever retreat, 'tis the laſt. I have given the Nations Time to breathe, that they might be more worth the conquering, and when I rouze myſelf again it ſhall be only to their Ruin. Go, and prepare yourſelves for War and Danger, for be aſſur'd where I command you may all of you tremble to obey.

To TIM BIRCH, Gent.

SIR,

AS you have taken upon you the Character of a Reformer, I think you can't be too frequent on the Subject of Marriage; I am ſure there is no one Article in which the World in general wants more to be reform'd: For I take it that the ill Management in this Affair, is one great Source of all the Evils which prevail; and could this be righted, I doubt not but 'twould be one great Step towards a Reformation: Nor do I know a more likely Way to effect it than to give them a few Laſhes of Birch. There are very few that marry with right Views; which is the Reaſon ſo few are happy in that State. Some (and in Fact moſt) marry purely for Intereſt; without ever regarding the Temper or Diſpoſition of the Perſon to whom they are yoked; and think, becauſe their Chains are Gold, they ſhall never be weary of wearing them: But, alas! How ſoon do all thoſe glittering Joys turn to Droſs, and grow inſipid! nay perhaps nauſeous! and Home being no longer agreeable, they ſeek a Happineſs Abroad: That often carries them into bad Company; and they entice to Drinking; under the Notion of drowning their Cares in the ſparkling Bowl and Jollity; and ſo from thence are prompted by Degrees to all the Evils which prevail: By which they contract many Diſtempers, and ſo convey a crazy Conſtitution to their half-begotten Children; for which too many of the riſing Generation ſhall have Reaſon to curſe them. Others again marry purely for Beauty; but how vain and precarious a Foundation is that to build on! how ſoon will that Flower fade and be no longer grateful! And what will be the Conſequence? Why, the Affections when no longer charm'd, will be loſt; and hence will ariſe continual Jars and Diſcords; and how unhappy muſt ſuch a Condition be! how ſhocking! The Perſon that came to their Arms the Object of Joy and Admiration, ſoon becomes their entire Averſion! Others again marry merely to gratify their carnal Appetites; and ſo chuſe ſuch as they think can give them the greateſt and quickeſt Senſations: But, alas! how ſoon do thoſe Pleaſures cloy! and what is the natural Reſult? Why as 'tis plain, ſuch are guided by their Paſſions and not by their Reaſon, the Reſult is, they ſeek other Objects to gratify thoſe Deſires on; and ſo tempt their unhappy Mate to take the ſame vile Courſe; or abandon themſelves to bewail their unhappy Circumſtances, and curſe the Day wherein they were born. But here give me Leave to ſay that I think, marrying merely with this View, is not wholly free from Sin; nay far from it; for certainly the Crime is chiefly in the Intention, and not ſo much in the Action; for wherever it has the Conſent of the Will (in Caſes forbid) it becomes criminal; tho' not always ſo in the Action; where there is no Degree of the Conſent of the Will or Intention: As for Inſtance, a Perſon may by ſome vile Stratagem have another brought to their Bed, with whom they may converſe as Man and Wife; now where this is entirely unintended; without the Conſent of the Will before, or Approbation afterwards; that Perſon muſt be at leaſt in a very low Degree culpable: Or when near Relations have been ſeparated while yet very young; and driven into remote Parts of the World; and accidentally meeting again, have taken a Liking to each other, and been married, without being conſcious of their Relation; in ſuch Caſes, I ſay, the Fact is in a very low Degree culpable; while the other (tho' there were no Relation before, either of Affinity or Conſanguinity) is highly criminal. Again, others marry merely to oblige their Friends, and thoſe on whom they depend: Here indeed is ſome Shew of Reaſon; for we are commanded to obey our Parents and the higher Powers: And no Doubt we ought to ask their Advice, and gain their Conſent and Approbation: But as we are then (or ought to be) come to the Uſe of our Reaſon, and a Capacity to act for ourſelves, I can't think they have Authority, abſolutely, and peremptorily, to enjoin it; or that they ought to deem the Non-Compliance a Breach of Duty. They are commanded not to provoke their Children to Wrath; and I am ſure (unleſs they are Ideots, and have not this angelical Paſſion implanted within them) I ſay, I am ſure if they have the true Spirit of Love, this muſt provoke them in the higheſt Degree: Beſides they hereby betray their Want of Affection, and therefore demand the leſs Regard when they enforce that which Nature ſhrinks at! Once more, others marry purely for Faſhion-ſake; and leſt they ſhould let ſlip the critical Minute, take the firſt that will have them; they take no Thought of the Temper, Diſpoſition, or Circumſtances of the Perſon; and no Wonder when they leap into the Stream with ſuch heedleſs Haſte, that they ſhould raiſe the Mud, and fully all their Joys: For that there ſhould be Bliſs without Deſign is groſsly abſurd to imagine. Now where People marry merely with theſe Views, without any Regard to the Tempers, Virtues, Diſpoſitions, and Agreeableneſs of the Partners to whom they are link'd; how can any other be expected than that they ſhould diſagree? And if we can't find a Happineſs at Home, 'tis natural to ſeek it Abroad, in Company and Drinking, or any Thing elſe to beguile the unhappy Hours: Which are the great Foundations of all the Evils which prevail: But could this be prevented; could People be prevail'd on to chuſe ſuch Mates, whom they could love with an entire conjugal Affection; with whom they could maintain a ſacred and inviolable Friendſhip, and with whom they could moſt agreeably ſpend their Time; Vice would have a great Check as it were at the Spring-head;

" The World would learn to live by virtuous Rules,
" And Marr'age be no more the Jeſt of Fools.

Yours, &c. PHAETON.

In their Paſſage from Madeira, about 200 Leagues from the Lizard, their Carpenter, John Elliot, fell over-board likewiſe and was drowned.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Extract of a Letter from Cadiz, dated June 17. N. S.

ON the 12th Inſtant arrived here the Spiritu Sancto y Nueſtra Senhora de la Soledad, Capt. Joſeph Ignatio Armaolco, a Merchant-Man, one of the Galleons from Guarica, who brings Advice, that the Capitana, the Man of War that went from hence to ſuccour her, and the Paz, a Merchant-Man, ſailed two Days before him, being the 28th of April; and that after five Days ſailing he ſaw them all three at a Diſtance, but being a better Sailor than the reſt, he evaded joining of them, to make the beſt of his Way, and as the Wind has been very favourable, we expect hourly to hear of them. By Order of the Court publick Prayers have been ſaid in all the Churches at Seville for the Succeſs of the Expedition, which is now declared to be againſt Oran; and by Expreſſes from Alicant there is Advice of their ſailing from thence the 15th, conſiſting of upwards of 800 Veſſels.

Extract of a Letter from Alicant, dated June 18. N. S.

The grand Armada againſt the Africans ſailed hence the 15th Inſtant, under Convoy of Ten Spaniſh Men of War, one of 80 Guns, one of 70, ſeven of 60 to 64, and one of 50 Guns, beſides two ſmall Frigates of 16 to 20 Guns, two Bombs, and ſeven Gallies. The Fleet is commanded by Don Franciſco Cornejo, who carries a Flag at the Foretop-maſt Head: The Gallies by Don Lewis Raggio; the Land Army by the Conde de Montemar, and conſiſts in 32 compleat Battalions of Foot, 12 Squadrons of Horſe, and 12 of Dragoons, making in all 26000 effective Men, beſides the Train of Artillery and their Dependants.

Gibraltar, May 22. N. S. Our Garriſon conſiſts at preſent of eight Regiments, containing 800 Men each; and all the Fortifications and new Works are compleated; ſo that the Workmen are no longer employ'd thereon. There are now in our Bay three Men of War and ſeven Merchant-Ships. We have Advice from Oran, that the Algerines (under whoſe Juriſdiction that Town is, are putting the ſaid Place into as good a Condition of Defence as poſſible; that they are drawing all their Forces towards the Sea-ſide; that having ſent to the King of Morocco for Succours, he had promiſed them all the Troops he could ſpare; and that in Regard the Moors made the Repulſing of the Spaniards a common Concern with them, they hoped they ſhould ſoon be able to form an Army of above 100,000 Men in the Neighbourhood of Oran, to give the Spaniſh Dons a warm Reception, in caſe they pretended to land there: That moreover they expected very conſiderable Succours from the Eaſtern Parts of Barbary; ſo that in all Probability the Spaniards will find the Conqueſt of that Fortreſs a much harder Task than they imagined.
